Courier Brings Assurances From Germany Of A Conference On Anti-Semitism

The American Jewish Committee received assurances from President Theodor Heuss of West Germany that he would call a conference of ministers of education to discuss the problem of anti-Semitism. This pledge, as well as a statement from Erich Ollenhauer, head of the Social Democratic party in West Germany, citing the seriousness of anti-Semitism, were made known in New York at the fifty-two-year-old Committee's four-day, annual meeting at the Commodore Hotel.

The Committee, which has been concerned over recent incidents of anti-Semitism in Germany, delegated Zachariah Shuster, the head of its European office, to meet with President Heuss, Herr Ollenhauer and other German officials, says the New York Times. Mr. Shuster arrived with the statements from the German leaders.

In his statement, the head of the Bonn government declared that the "young people of Germany are but slightly interested in the events of recent decades, which they have known only as children." This was an allusion to the Nazi persecution of the Jewish people.

He asserted that "it is our task to inculcate within them a spirit of equal respect for all men as fellow human beings regardless of race or religion." The problem of anti-Semitism, he said, should be dealt with directly through education of German youth.

Of recent German court decisions that have been considered lax in dealing with anti-Semitism President Heuss said that "as a result of personal inclinations there have been some unfortunate court decisions." He added that these distressed the state itself.

Mr. Shuster said he had received Herr Heuss' "unreserved assurances" that "anti-Semitism has no place in the political domain proper in Germany."

Herr Ollenhauer, who heads the oldest political party in Germany, declared that recent nationalist and anti-Semitic incidents had been sufficiently serious to warrant an appeal by his party to the German people to resist any nationalistic or anti-Semitic expressions or acts.

Early this year, the Committee warned Chancellor Konrad Adenauer of its concern over the reported "revival of Nazism on a popular level", says the New York Times. Last month, the Chancellor in a letter to the Committee said that anti-Semitic incidents did not "represent the attitude of the German people as a whole."

Chancellor Konrad Adenauer expressed in the West German Parliament "deepest regret" over the recent increase in instances of anti-Semitism in his country" some months ago. He said: "These incidents are a severe injustice to German citizens of the Jewish

Labour Leader Was Son Of Russian Rabbi, Came To U.S. At 21

Max Zaritsky, who retired in 1950 after thirty-nine years as a labor union official, died in Boston, Mass., at Massachusetts Memorial Hospital. He was 74 years old and lived at 10 Holmfield Avenue, Matapan. Mr. Zaritsky was president from 1936 to 1950 of the United Hatters, Cap and Millinery Workers International Union. His leadership actually began in 1919 when he was elected president of the Cloth Hat, Cap and Millinery Workers Union. This union was merged with the United Hatters in 1934.

Although his union had only 40,000 members, Mr. Zaritsky won a position of major influence in labor's affairs. His headquarters were in New York, where he lived until two years ago.

Mr. Zaritsky was born in Petrikov, Russia, the son of a rabbi, says the New York Times. He came to the United States in 1906 at the age of 21. He was employed in a hat and cap factory in

East Europe Jews Get Visas For Lands Over Here

Jewish emigrants from Eastern European countries who have indicated they are desirous of being resettled in Western Hemisphere countries, are continuing to be processed in Vienna and other European cities by staff of United Hias Service, the world-wide Jewish migration agency. This was reported in New York to Carlos L. Israels, president of United Hias, by James P. Rice, the agency's executive director who returned from Europe where he consulted with governmental and other leaders on current migration problems. United Hias, a beneficiary of the United Jewish Appeal helps Jewish emigrants to resettle in countries throughout the world except in Israel where immigration is a responsibility of the Jewish Agency for Israel.

In the past four years, United Hias has resettled close to 35,000 Jews in the U.S., Canada, Latin America, Australia, and elsewhere. Of these, more than 14,000 were Jewish men, woman, and children who managed to leave Hungary following the revolt of 1956. An additional 800 to 1,000 Hungarian Jews who remain in Western Europe, according to Mr. Rice, will be resettled this year, mostly in the U.S. under a provision (Section 15) of the 1957 U.S. refugee legislation.

While in Europe Mr. Rice attended a Passover Seder in the port city of Genoa, Italy, for a sizeable group of Jewish refugees and migrants from Eastern Europe, and Egypt, who have already been visaed for North and South America and Australia, and others who are in the process of obtaining visas. He said: "The ancient story of the exodus of the Israelites never before held greater significance for the participants in the Genoa Seder which our agency had arranged in cooperation with the Jewish Community of Genoa, and the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, which is also a U.J.A. beneficiary. I met with Jews who but 48 hours previously had been in their homes in Eastern European countries, and who had arrived in Genoa on the first leg of their journeys to relatives in the Western Hemisphere. All of them had been issued exit visas by the governments of their native countries after relatives abroad had obtained visas for them."

Mr. Rice pointed out that there was a small group of migrants who for various reasons, especially family reunion, had indicated their desire to immigrate to countries other than those originally projected for them, and for whom his organization is now seeking visas. While in Europe, Mr. Rice told Mr. Israels, he conferred with governmental and inter-governmental officials, including Marcus Daly, director of the Intergovernmental Committee for European Migration, and U.S. Consular of-

U.S. Zionist Leaders Ask For More Help For Israel

Zionist leaders appealed to Western nations to safeguard Israel as a democratic state.

Increased economic support for Israel from American Zionists was also urged at the end of a two-day conference of the national executive council of the Zionist Organization of America. The Council, the organization's ruling body between conventions, met at the Carnegie Endowment Building for International Peace, 345 East Forty-sixth Street in New York.

Abraham A. Redelheim, Council president, noted that Israel was nearing her eleventh anniversary and hailed her economic and human achievements "at a time when the country is engaged in an incessant battle for survival. The fact that Israeli democracy has been maintained in a region where the concepts and procedures of democracy are not yet understood or appreciated," he said "is a manifestation of the historic function which Israel is destined to perform in the Middle East," says the New York Times. Israel's anniversary was observed on the fifth day of the Hebrew month of Iyar, which fell on May 13 this year.

In praising Israel's technical assistance to newly independent lands such as Ghana, Mr. Redelheim said that "Israel merits and should receive the material and moral support necessary to carry forward her far-from-completed tasks." Rabbi Max Nussbaum, chairman of the Council, urged greater support of the United Jewish Appeal, the Israel Bond Organization, and Zionist projects in Israel.

In another report, Jacques Torczyner, chairman of the World Zionist Affairs Committee, said that "the extent Jews the world over will continue to support Israel depends on an educated and well-informed public." Dr. Morton J. Robbins, chairman of the American Zionist Fund, reported that $304,000 has been raised this year for Israeli projects, the Zionist House in Tel Aviv and Kfar Silver, the agricultural training institute. Rabbi I. Usher Kirshblum, chairman of the membership committee, announced the enrollment of 1,100 new life members.

Moses Schonfeld, the Organization's chairman for United Nations Affairs, said the Zionist organization "was gaining support for its objectives within the non-governmental organizations in the United Nations."

The Council hailed Mendel N. Fisher, executive director of the Jewish National Fund of America, on his twenty-fifth anniversary in that post, says the New York Times. It voted to hold its sixty-second annual convention in Washington from September 10 to 13.

Rabbis Assail Judaism Council For Charge That U. J. A. "Grossly Exaggerated" Emigration Of Rumanian Jews To Israel

The New York Board of Rabbis took issue with the head of the American Council for Judaism Philanthropies Fund for his criticism of the United Jewish Appeal. Henry S. Moyer, president of the Fund, accused the U. J. A. of "grossly" overestimating the emigration of Rumanian Jews to Israel. In reply, Rabbi David I. Golovensky, president of the Board of Rabbis, and Rabbi Harold H. Gordon, executive vice president, issued a joint statement.

They declared that the "universally respected United Jewish Appeal has been serving as the instrumentality for the rescue of hundreds of thousands of homeless remnants by helping to settle them in the State of Israel and other hospitable countries," says the New York Times. The New York Board of Rabbis, which was established in 1881, comprises 700 spiritual leaders of the three branches of Judaism — Orthodox, Conservative, and Reform.

The joint statement continued: "The cynical fact that a spokesman for the Jewish 'Philanthropic Fund' attempts by cunning innuendo to bite the hand of the U. J. A., which has been feeding and rescuing masses of oppressed Jews, provides ample justification for the contempt in which the Council, whose members represent, according to their own figures less than one-third of one per cent of American Jewry, is held by millions of Jews in this country."

In denouncing the Council for what they termed its "hostility for their program" here in Israel," Rabbis Golovensky and Gordon said they were "chagrined; however, that The New York Times should regard their hysterical fulminations as 'News Fit to Print.'"

"It is all the more lamentable," they added, "that the accusation should appear in the midst of the United Jewish Appeal's campaign for critically needed funds for rehabilitation and liberation during the week of Passover," says the New York Times. This is a period, the statement went on, "when Jewish hearts are stirred by the vision and hope to bring salvation and security to homeless Jews in Eastern Europe and other parts of the world who look to the U.J.A. and Israel as their hope for redemption."

The American Council for Judaism, which is anti-Zionist, was established in 1943. Its Philanthropic Fund was set up in 1954. The Fund is "dedicated to providing aid for needy Jews and others in categories for which funds are not otherwise available." The Council says it has 20,000 members.

Nearly all major American Jewish groups — religious, secular and non-Zionist, as well as Zionist — have pledged moral or financial support, or both, to Israel.

The head of the American Council for Judaism Philanthropic Fund had charged that the United Jewish Appeal "grossly exaggerated" the actual emigration of Rumanian Jews to Israel. In a statement, Henry S. Moyer of Scarsdale, N. Y., newly-elected president of the Fund, said that the present U. J. A. fund-raising campaign "repeatedly claimed 100,000 Rumanian Jew were emigrating though on November 2, 1958, the Jewish Agency had quietly estimated that 16,500 Rumanian Jews would emigrate in 1959."

Mr. Moyer added that "some 18,000 did leave Rumania up to the time emigration stopped." He also charged that the U.J.A. and its constituent bodies "are operated by, and in the interests of Zionism, which has as its goal the ingathering of the Jews of the world into the State of Israel."

The American Council for Judaism, which has a strong anti-Zionist policy, was established in 1943 and its Philantropic Fund in 1954 says the New York Times. Mr. Moyer's statement said that the Philanthropic Fund has given emergency aid to "who wish to settle in countries other than Israel."

"These Rumanian Jews," he said, "underscore the reason for the creation of our Fund." He added that the United Jewish Appeal presented two serious problems for Jews "who want to separate politics and philanthropy." Mr. Moyer held that "nearly 90 per cent of U. J. A. funds go to the Jewish Agency," which he termed "a quasi-governmental body of Israel and the governing arm of the World Zionist Organization."

"To achieve its political goals," he said, "the Jewish Agency has overstimulated emigration by every possible means. While the so-called saving of deliberately created refugees may be in the interest of Israel's immigration or security program, it is a great disservice to Jews living in countries where there is no religious disability."

He also maintained that the United Jewish Appeal and its agencies "are not operating in the interest of the refugees when they give little or no assistance to those who wish to settle elsewhere than Israel." He added that "proof of this policy was provided in the movement of Iraqi, Moroccan, Hungarian, Egyptian, Polish, and now Rumanian Jews."

The Philanthropic Fund's "main concern is the plight of the Rumanian Jews stranded in Austria and Belgium who want to choose their country of settlement," Mr.

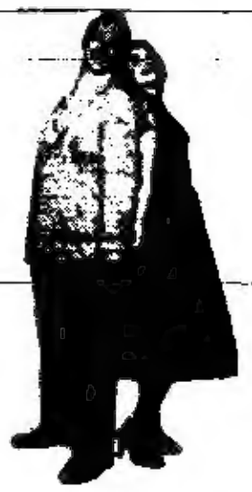
Things my husband taught me



Before I married, all I knew about wine was that it's made from grapes. My husband turned out to be keen on wine, and he brought the first bottle of Canadian "74" Sherry into the house. I liked what I tasted. So did our friends. That bottle didn't last long.

I still have a lot to learn about wine. But I don't have to know anything about it to enjoy "74" Sherry. It dresses up a dinner table. Does things for hors d'oeuvres. It costs so little. We always keep a stock on hand.

Sholem Aleichem And The Hebrew Language

BY ITZHAK IVRY, OF THE JEWISH AGENCY FOR ISRAEL

The hundredth birthday of Sholom Aleichem is being celebrated in Israel and in many countries of the world, including Soviet Russia. The Israeli government and its Ministry for Post and Telegraph is issuing a special Sholom Aleichem stamp, and a new edition of Sholom Aleichem's works will be published. There is also a project to establish in Israel a Sholom Aleichem museum. The Sholom Aleichem archives are still hidden in a safe in the custody of the family here and are, in the main, inaccessible.

The immortal Jewish humorist began as a bilingual writer, like most of the eminent writers of the classical period in Hebrew and Yiddish renaissance literature. Moreover, his first correspondences on educational problems were sent from Pereyeslav to the Hebrew papers, "Hatzefira" and later to the "Hamelits", the most eminent journals of the enlightened Russian Jewry. It is noteworthy that at the beginning of the eighties, young Sholom Aleichem turned to Yiddish largely because he felt that Yiddish was the language of the masses, and that the only way to educate the masses is to speak to them in their own language. He considered Hebrew the language of eternal values, and as a story-teller he wished and hoped that he would one day find the right translator for his stories.

The fact remains, however, that during the first ten years of his literary activities he devoted most of his creative energy to the Yiddish language, both in feuilletons and stories. Only in the years 1889-1892 was Sholom Aleichem a steady contributor to Hamelits, publishing stories, essays, and sketches. It was in that period that he wrote a series of "Pictures And Shadows From The Life Of The Jews In Mazepevka." That town was later to be turned in his riper Yiddish stories into the now famous Kasrilevka. The interested reader may find a great deal of material on this period in Sholom Aleichem's writing in two essays by the Hebrew-American bibliographer R. A. Malachi, "Sholom Aleichem, The Hebrew Writer" (Hadoar, No. 30, 31, 1951). Malachi quotes David Frischman who published a story by Sholom Aleichem in "Hadar", complimented the story-teller as a "master of the Hebrew style," and told him, "In my personal view you are not a Yiddish writer, but a Hebrew writer."

In one of his autobiographical works Sholom Aleichem mentions as his first work a commentary on the Bible and a Hebrew grammar composed by him when he was hardly ten years old. He also wrote a Hebrew novel "Bath Zion," patterned after Avraham Mapu's "Ahavath Zion," the famous biblical love story. But, apparently, he did not think too highly of those first writings, for he avoids mentioning them in his biographical material supplied to J. H. Ravnitzky, Bialik's friend and collaborator. To Ravnitzky he writes about "a burning desire to write which overwhelmed him at the age of seventeen or eighteen," when he was earning a living as teacher to a Jewish village's children.

Sholom Aleichem's ardent wish to become a writer for the Jewish masses and the fast growing Yiddish press of that period caused him later to devote his main energies to the Yiddish language during the next years. When Sholom Aleichem began to issue a series of books in Yiddish titled "Yiddishe Folks Bibliothek" he was criticized by devoted Hebraists, among them A. L. Levinsky, for neglecting the Hebrew language. Sholom Aleichem not only reaffirmed his belief in the renaissance of the Hebrew language but also his great love for Hebrew literature. But he maintained that he saw no competition between the two languages, and both should be made to prosper and develop. In his view, "A way must be found for the Jewish masses to understand the ideas of its enlightened people and of its scholars. Such a vehicle is the spoken Yiddish language understood by all, while the Hebrew language is limited to the few."

It is of interest to note that even then Sholom Aleichem saw in the renaissance of Yiddish an instrument for educating the masses in the national spirit and giving them spiritual content. At the same time, he professed to consider Jewish literature, both Hebrew and Yiddish, as one product of Jewish creativity.

Sholom Aleichem, whose understanding and love for the Jewish people was so deep and all-embracing, had a dream which was with him all his life: writing about the Jewish masses, he wished at the same time to be universally read, not only by the Jews but by the whole human race. Unlike other writers of numerically small nations who are ready to deal with subjects and heroes more popular with the outside worldreader and are willing to pay the price of fame by adjusting their work to the demands of the world's literary market, Sholom Aleichem never left the circle of his lifelong interests: the description of the Jewish individual, Jewish society, and folklore.

At the same time, he was very glad when "Mottel, The Cantor's Son" was translated into Russian (1910). Leading Russian writers and critics of that time lavished their praise on the Jewish writer of the Pale. Gorky said, "This book shines with devoted love, good and wise, for the people. Such a feeling is very rare in our days." The writer, Alexander Kuprin, said, "Some laugh when reading your humorous book, but I, I cry." Very soon Sholom Aleichem became known to the Russian reader, and later on to the European reader in various languages.

The American general reader became acquainted with Sholom Aleichem in 1916 when the New York newspaper "The World" purchased from him the rights to the English translation of the Mottel stories, and began to print them each Sunday in the literary supplement, and in twenty other syndicated papers. In a letter from New York to his family in Odessa, Sholom Aleichem wrote, "My stories now reach five million American readers and the newspapers announce, 'Read Sholom Aleichem, the Jewish Mark Twain, in the Sunday edition of 'The World.' Original! New! Humoristic!' Such a success has not been awarded until now to any Jewish writer, not even Zangwill. This will give me the possibility to enter the broad stream of English literature . . ."

But wordly success as a universal writer was not his only dream. Sholom Aleichem, who loved Yiddish dearly, was, nevertheless, convinced that only the Hebrew language can guarantee immortality to important literary works. He loved Yiddish, but he was not a Yiddishist, and he never could understand those who fought the battle of the two languages and fanatically clung to one or the other of them. As his fame spread, he looked for a Hebrew translator who would succeed in preserving the folklore and the charm of his translucent prose while giving it an original Hebrew form. Several Hebrew writers tried to translate him, but it was left to J. D. Berkowitz to become the master-translator of the great Jewish humorist into Hebrew.

J. D. Berkowitz, an aspiring story-teller himself, was a youngster, when Sholom Aleichem approached him in Odessa with a request to translate for him a feuilleton for the "Haraman". Purim issue (1905). Berkowitz, in his memoirs called "Harishonim Kivnei Adam," and dealing with Sholom Aleichem and his contemporaries (5 volumes, Tel Aviv, 1938-1942), describes how Sholom Aleichem asked him one day if he would be willing to do the translation. Berkowitz said, "I do not want to do any translating jobs, I am busy with my own writing." But Sholom Aleichem looked at him quizzically and said, "How old are you, young man?" Berkowitz answered, "Very soon I will be twenty." Being thus reminded Me?

I WANT TO BE WITH THE WIFE AND KIDS ON THE NEVELE SUMMER FAMILY PLAN. It's as simple as this... I go like the proverbial Joe 50 weeks a year... come home drawn and quartered from a day at the "rat race"... see the kids at mealtime only for the second they need to dial ZORRO, WAGON TRAIN, HIGHWAY PATROL or THE N. Y. YANKEES (I'M AN "ALSO RAN" TO GHS. 2, 4, 5, 7, 9, 11, 13)... MORNINGS A QUICK GOODBYE and AWAY WE GO (separately).
FOR ONCE IN MY LIFE I WANT MY KIDS ALL TO MYSELF... I'M GONNA RIDE, TENNIS, BOAT, SWIM AND GOLF WITH THEM... When The "LEGS" give out... I want to sit around their PRIVATE PLAYLAND and enjoy watching them at the arts, crafts, music and games. EVENINGS... I want to link arms with the lady I love, rediscover her at dinner, sit back to "roar" at the actors, then to dance, to quaff and so to the next day. What do I pay for all this? The Nevele Summer Family Plan Rates are so Ridiculously low that I should put down my retainer now for the NEXT 21 SUMMERS.

In Israel, They Live For Music, Says Composer Of "Sweet Psalmist"

In 1933, as Hitler came to power, Paul Frankenburger left his native Munich and fled to Palestine. Today, Palestine is Israel and Paul Frankenburger is Paul Ben-Haim, that country's foremost composer. Mr. Ben-Haim, making his first visit to the United States as a guest of the American-Israel Cultural Foundation and the Institute of Contemporary Art, told the story to the New York Herald Tribune in his own way: "I had a good career in Germany, composing, conducting and playing the piano — all subjects I had studied at the State Academy in Munich. But after Hitler came there was of course, no chance for cultural activities by Jews. And so I left my home.

"Now, you must remember that in '33 Palestine was a British mandate, and I was only able to obtain a tourist visa. That visa stipulated in strong terms that I was not allowed to do any work, even if it was offered to me. But I was asked to give recitals. 'I couldn't,' I answered, 'I've promised.' 'Nonsense,' my friends said, 'give them, but change your name first. No one will know.'

"So I decided to take a Hebrew name: As it happens, my father's name was Heinrich, Haim in Hebrew — it means 'life.' And 'Ben' means 'son of.' So I took the name Ben-Haim, son of Heinrich. When I was legalized a few months later, when I knew I could stay in Palestine, I wanted to go back to the original. It was too late. People were accustomed to Ben-Haim. Now, I must say I am glad. Frankenburger is too long, too German in character. Ben-Haim suits me better."

Concerning his visit to America, Mr. Ben-Haim came principally to attend the New York Philharmonic performances of his "Sweet Psalmist of Israel." The work, inspired by the tale of King David, was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, and, indeed, word that it was going to be played was first received by Mr. Ben-Haim in a letter from Olga Koussevitzky, the late conductor's wife.

"She wanted me to come to hear it," Mr. Ben-Haim said. "But I replied that the financial problems were forbidding. That is where the American-Israel Cultural Foundation and the Institute of Contemporary Art took over. And here I am."

Naturally, since he had been in New York only a few days, the composer had no taste for committing himself on the American artistic scene, though he was perceptibly anxious to discuss Israel and the musical life to be found there, says the New York Herald Tribune. "The situation is fine," he said. "In our small country we have an enormous amount of musical activity. We have an excellent orchestra, the Israel Philharmonic, which plays four times a week for forty-six weeks of the year. Our hall in Tel Aviv was donated by Frederic Mann of Philadelphia, and it seats 3,000. It is filled for every performance so that 12,000 people a week hear the orchestra. Believe me, it is not easy to buy a ticket.

"Then, too, we have an opera company in Tel Aviv — that's Israel's cultural center, even though Jerusalem is the capital. In that regard, the situation is the same between New York and Washington. Anyway, our opera runs ten months of the year, and the performances are in Hebrew. That is, with the exception of guest artists who sing in their native language. Not long ago we had a Japanese Madame Butterfly. She sang in Japanese and the rest of the cast sang in Hebrew. It worked out very well.

"But the main thing is that Israel is music-minded in every way — even our children are exceptionally gifted. When you say that everyone wants to know why, and I think it's because the Jews are basically a very musical people; musicality is one of their instinctive gifts. I mean, look at the Jews who are musicians — Heifetz, Horowitz, Menuhin, Stern, Oistrakh, Rubinstein, Piatigorsky, Milstein, Schnabel, Kogan, Gilels, Bruno Walter, Bernstein, Milhaud, Copland, Schönberg, Sarkin — I could go on and on. Music is a natural heritage, that's all. At least that's part of the explanation."

When asked by the New York Herald Tribune to supply the rest, Mr. Ben-Haim replied, "I think the years of seclusion in ghettos may have had something to do with it. Music was a form of release. You see, the Jews didn't paint pictures because it was against the religious laws to do so. The law says that you are not to make a picture of God, and since God created man in His image you were forbidden to paint a picture of man, too. Of course, that is all over now: we have many gifted sculptors and painters. Still they are not nearly as numerous as musicians.

"And I am not," Mr. Ben-Haim said emphatically, "speaking only of professionals. In every townlet and village you find music being made. In the kibbutzim, the communal agricultural settlements, there are good amateur musicians of all kinds. They join together — one kibbutz with another — to form choruses and orchestras that can sing and play anything you want. In Israel, the people live for music.

"Then, also," Mr. Ben-Haim observed by way of a coda, "we have young composers all over. They are not much interested in the advanced twelve-tone techniques, though in other respects they are very modern. Of course they have a hard time — show me a composer who doesn't. And the general public is not really as interested in contemporary music as they are in the standard repertoire. But that condition is not confined to Israel, is it?

"Still, in a country with only two million inhabitants music is a twelve months' activity. You hear it everywhere," Mr. Ben-Haim told the New York Herald Tribune, "and everywhere it is loved."

SHOLEM ALEICHEM AND THE HEBREW LANGUAGE

that he still had time to do his own writing, Berkowitz agreed.

From this time onward the artful translations of Sholom Aleichem's works into Hebrew became the great task of his life. Berkowitz, later to become Sholom Aleichem's son-in-law, evoked his great satisfaction with his translations. Sholom Aleichem not only liked his Hebrew style, saying repeatedly, "This is exactly a style after my heart," but also found a great advantage in Berkowitz's approach to the art of translation. Berkowitz did not slavishly follow the text, word by word, and whenever it was impossible to find a Hebrew equavalent for a Yiddish idiomatic expression, Berkowitz used most appropriate Hebrew synonyms and expressions. Sholom Aleichem said, "This is fine. This is the right way to translate. I hate a translater who follows my footsteps like an untaught calf, chewing the cud of my words."

In the "Sholom Aleichem Buch," (published first in 1921, in New York, and republished by Ikuf, in 1958), many of his letters to his friends and family are reproduced. One of them, written to J. D. Berkowitz in Hebrew (as most of his letters to his beloved son-in-law and translator) and dated January 10, 1911, says: "No one but you can and should translate my writings, and I will not permit anybody. Only you know what additions I would have made, and you include them!" We should do well to remember that Sholom Aleichem first demonstrated this progressive and cultured approach to literary translation more then fifty years ago and remained true to it all his life.

Throughout the past half century J. D. Berkowitz has devoted all his talent and energies to the great labor of love, translating Sholom Aleichem. When the first three volumes of Sholom Aleichem appeared in Hebrew ("Tuvia Hacholev," "Kathrielim," and "Menachem Mendel", "Bnai Hachalomot," Warsaw, 1911-12, Hashachar Publishing Co.), Berkowitz declined to affix his signature as translator. But later, and only on Sholom Aleichem's insistence, he did sign his name to the translations. Since then, Berkowitz has not only translated all the works of Sholom Aleichem into Hebrew (they were published by Dvir, Tel-Aviv, Israel), but has also rewritten for the stage many of his plays and comedies, several of which have been played by Habima. His translations are classic works of art in Hebrew literature and serve as a supreme example of selfless devotion, great erudition, and creativity in this field.

The tremendous popularity of Sholom Aleichem as a writer and Jewish humorist has not dimmed with the years. He is still one of the most popular writers with Israel's youth despite the foreign and far-removed background of his heroes and society. Even in Soviet Russia, where Hebrew and Yiddish books are still forbidden fruit, and only the Russian translations of this great Jewish writer are available, he is recognized among the great writers of the Russian past.

Special celebrations were held in Soviet Russia in his honor, on the occasion of the 100th anniversary of his birth. It is a whim of history that Sholom Aleichem was given top honors in a country where Jewish literature is still not free to flourish. After all, it was Sholom Aleichem who, among other fathers of modern Jewish literature, gave it stature and greatness, and it was he who proposed this inscription on his tombstone:

" He loved all human beings
But most of all a Jew,
Was all his life a wanderer,
Now he rests in peace."

If ever there was a writer who, by describing Jewish life, folklore, and traditions in the Pale, made them most understandable and brought them close to everybody's heart, it is Sholom Aleichem. His art is deeply Jewish and, at the same time, thoroughly universal. And today it may be said that his wish to be preserved in the language of the Bible and to become a writer universally read has come true. The monument built largely after his death, by his master translator, J. D. Berkowitz, will preserve the great qualities of his art for generations to come.

Many big industries and companies require that new employees present a health certificate before entering their employment. This includes a chest x-ray examination. Many new cases of tuberculosis are discovered by chest x-rays in time to allow a successful treatment for the disease.
